Atrial Fibrillation in the ICU.

2 Bosch NA, et al. Chest 2018 - Review. PMID 29627355 Free PMC article.

Atrial fibrillation (AF) is the most common arrhythmia encountered in the ICU. Preexisting AF is highly prevalent among older patients with chronic conditions who are at risk for critical illness, whereas new-onset AF can be triggered by accelerated atrial remodeling and arrhythmogenic triggers encountered during critical illness. The acute loss of atrial systole and onset of rapid ventricular rates that characterize new-onset AF often lead to decreased cardiac output and hemodynamic compromise. ...

Atrial fibrillation (AF) and arterial hypertension frequently coexist, not only because arterial hypertension increases the incidence of new onset of atrial fibrillation, but also because those two entities share common risk factors and conditions that increase the incidence of both. ...In order to assess and treat these patients, proper blood pressure (BP) measurement as well as detection of atrial fibrillation is mandatory. ...
